The President and Party Leave
Santa Fe at 7 O'Clock
This Morning.

Special to the Gazette.

Santa Fe, N. M., October 28. — President Hayes and party reached Santa Fe from Galisteo Junction, where they had spent the night, about 9:30 this morning. At the depot they were received by the committee and a large number of citizens, on foot, on horseback and in carriages. Immediately on their arrival they were escorted, to the plaza, headed by the ninth cavalry band, a salute being fired during the march.

On the arrival at the plaza speeches of welcome were made and replied to by the President. Secretary Ramsey and General Sherman also made short speeches. The party has spent the day looking around the old town and visiting all places of interest. To-night the President has held a reception in the old palace built three hundred years ago by Coronado. A very enjoyable time seems to have been had by all parties. The party will leave at 7 o'clock to-morrow morning, making a straight run to Kansas City without stop. From Kansas City the President goes to Fremont, his old home, to pass the Sabbath, thence to Washington. He is very anxious to reach Washington by November 1st, hence he has declined a number of invitations to visit other cities on his way east. Secretary Ramsey from Kansas City goes to Minnesota and thence to Washington. General Sherman will remain three or four days in St. Louis.

—Henry Hysinger received a telegram yesterday morning from I. Stern stating that he would be home soon.

—The little streaks of snow on Hermit's peak look a little frigid in the middle of the day when the sun is shining so warm in this locality.

—A lively joint discussion between the political parties came off at Upper Vegas Wednesday night. Good order prevailed throughout the entire meeting.

—Hayes and family are on their way to the election by this time. It would be too bad for General Garfield to lose such a large number of Republican votes.

—Geo. Chandler of Tiptonville, prefers to let his wagon remain on the plain, where his horse was stolen, to risking another loss by going after it.

—We are under obligations to Tom Linson & Co., for beautiful landscape views of the town of White Oaks and the mountains in which the Homestead mine is situated.

—Father Tomulo, editor of the Revista Catolica of this city, went east yesterday to take a position in the Jesuit College at Cincinnati. He expects to remain there some years.

—Rev. Calfee's friends are rallying to his assistance and will soon have him another horse; this is good and shows that his labors are appreciated for without such assistance he could not now get another horse.

—M. Cosgrove got back from his trip south yesterday, where he has been engaged re-organizing the mail line and cutting it down to a tri-weekly route. Mr. Cosgrove says everything is quiet down the road.

—An Iowa paper says: "Since the new registrations have been in force, the clerk has recorded 102 births, of which 60 are males and 42 females. There have been 46 deaths, of which 30 were males and 16 females. There have been 32 people married, of which there was an equal number of males and females.

—A Mexican who has been working in Rupe & Castle's planing mill met with a serious mishap yesterday. He was working in the mill and something struck him on the chin, cutting his tongue almost square off, only the edge hanging. Dr. Bayly stitched it together and at last accounts the Mexican was doing well.

The Robertson Process.

As we are informed, this process is being tested on an effective scale at a place in Colorado known as Granite, about twenty-five miles from Leadville in Chaffee county, at works owned by the Granite Con. Mining Company with a capacity of 72 tons a day. The results of the first experiment are announced in the Leadville Chronicle of October 6, in the following words:

"The amalgamating mill in camp Granite had one of the most remarkable clean-ups yesterday known in Colorado, and much excitement prevails in consequence. The run had been but for three days, and in all about 36 tons of rock had been used. The result was the unheard of amount of thirty-six pounds of amalgam. This was placed in the retort, the quicksilver evaporated, and an immense mass of bright yellow gold was turned out to the delighted operators. The yellow heap was placed on a pair of common platform scales and was found to weigh thirteen and three quarter pounds and worth $3,300. This rivals the California mines in their palmy days. The rock used was not of as good a quality as can be produced in this locality and the owners of the mine are confident that future mill runs will exceed this one in richness. If these views are correct there is no doubt but that Granite and the vicinity will prove the El Dorado of Colorado and hereafter no one save a man of millions can purchase an interest in our mines."

A week later another trial was made at the same works, the results of which are given in the Chronicle of Oct. 7, as follows:

"The second clean-up of the amalgamating mill took place yesterday with unprecedented results. A run of four days had been made and an even hundred pounds of amalgam taken out. This was placed in the retort and the mercury vaporizing forty pounds of pure bright gold returned. This is worth in round figures, just $7,440.

Great excitement prevails in the camp in consequence of the clean-up, and prospecting is given a renewed boom."—Mining Record.

Rough on the Heather.

A few days since, five armed men broke into the house of a heather Chinee in Albuquerque. They beat him in a frightful manner and robbed him of all his earthly possessions. His wounds are not so severe but that he will recover in a few days.

—Hopper Bro's say that they find no difference between a large house and a small one when it comes to selling large amounts of goods. Their trade is as good now as it ever was.

Ueete Esack's Wisdom.

There is no victory so cheap and so complete as forgiveness.

If you suspect a man wrongfully you license him to defeat you.

Laek is the dream of a simpleton; a wise man makes his own good fortune.

Wealth in this world is just so much baggage to be taken care of, but a cultivated brain is easy to carry and is a never-failing source of profit and pleasure.

Gratitude is a debt which all men owe and which few pay cheerfully.

Happiness consists in being happy. There is no particular rule for it.

About all that cunning can do for a man is to make him incredulous.

Why He Married Her.

When Tom Carlin married Eliza Moore everybody in Greenville laughed and wondered. Tom was the most popular man in town. He was a wealthy merchant, very handsome and only twenty-five; and could have selected a wife from the best and richest families in the neighborhood. But what a choice he made! No wonder Greenville was astonished and amused. Eliza Moore was thirty-five. She had red hair; she was tall and angular; she painted and powdered; and people said her temper was something awful! Besides, she was deaf as a post. And yet with all these drawbacks she got a young, handsome and wealthy husband. The matter was a profound mystery to every one except Tom Carlin.

He was impulsive to recklessness. Eliza Moore went into society, but played on every occasion the part of a wall-flower. Tom pitied her and paid her some trifling attention which she warmly appreciated. He loaned her books—she was fond of reading—and occasionally sent her flowers. These floral offerings were usually of the choicest kind, and to them the young man could attribute his "misfortune," if such a term can properly be used in referring to his marriage.

One evening he carried to Miss Moore's humble cottage a fine rose geranium. The lady was delighted with the gift and an animated conversation upon its merits followed. They were seated upon the sofa, side by side, and Tom became very enthusiastic. After discussing the flower eloquently he added:

"Miss Moore I want you to cherish it for my sake; I want you to keep it forever!"

He was startled by the effect his words had upon his auditor. Miss Moore turned deeply pale and two tears rolled slowly down her cheeks. To his surprise she took his hand and pressed it to her lips. But her reply almost paralyzed him.

"Mr. Carlin," she faltered, "I—I hardly dreamed of this; and—yet I prayed for it. I could not think you would fancy me, there were so many others; but I know that you love me for my own sake, and I need hardly add that I return your love. You are the only person who ever touched my heart to its deepest recesses. My life has been a sad one; but now I will have something to live for; and I will show you and the world that I can be worthy of your confidence and affection."

She was weeping violently now. Tom looked at her like one in a dream. In an instant he remembered deafness; and it flashed upon him that she had mistaken his words for some such tender expression as "I want to keep you forever!" He looked at her, and a tide of emotion swept over him. It seemed to him as if she had revealed her very soul to him in her simple answer. He thought of all her lonely years devoid of all affection, withering every tender feeling and turning natural emotions into chilly reserve! Yes, he remembered all the e things, and the natural impulsiveness which would have made him shrink from informing her of the terrible blunder she had made, gave way to a feeling that made him, in our opinion, at least, a hero. He accepted the "mistake" and resolved to make the best of it.

When they parted that night it was as engaged lovers, and a day had been set for the wedding. And if Tom was somewhat depressed, who can blame him? But he never faltered! No, not even when his friends overwhelmed him with ridicule and reproaches! He bore everything without offering one word of explanation and without a murmur! He made the sacrifice never flinching, and with Eliza Moore, as his wife, settled down and tried to resume the even tenor of his life.

Nor did the mistake wreck his life. He steadily prospered. Perhaps you may think Providence was inclined to be more lenient to him because of his sacrifice; but that supposition is not within our province to discuss. Suffice it to say Eliza Carlin became a changed woman; under her husband's care she grew almost youthful and really lovable. People noticed the change; and all agreed that Tom and his wife were a very happy couple after all.

It is something fine to be good but it is far finer to be good for something.

Niederwyl, in Aargau, has revived the story of the Corsican Brothers. Two friends dearly loved each other, and they made a compact that which ever died first, should visit his chum as soon as he could conveniently absent himself from his quarters in the other world. The time came when Death did tap one of them on the shoulder, and having obeyed the order, the dead man was not long in calling to mind his promise. He visited his friend and was warmly welcomed. But he soon became a bore for his ghostship seemed to enjoy his reappearance in this world and was perpetually by the side of his friend. The latter wearied of the constant companionship of a ghost and went to the priest about it. The priest did all he could, but the ghost would not down. The fathers in the convent were consulted, but even they were powerless. And now the man, haunted into despair and desperation, has gone away, nobody knows where.—Forney's Progress.
